The Lover of El-Oued Souf

Isabelle Eberhardt was a Swiss explorer and author. She was born on October 17th 1877 in Geneva, Switzerland. As a teenager, Isabelle educated in Switzerland by her father and published short stories. She became interested in North Africa, so she moved to Algeria in May 1897, after an invitation from her friend the French photographer "Louis David". She dressed as a man, converted to Islam, and took the name of "Si Mahmoud Saadi". (§ 1)

Isabelle loved El-Oued Souf and called it "The City of Thousand Domes". She came to it twice, in 1899 and in 1900. She made many friends among them "Slimane Henny", an officer in the spahis from El-Oued Souf, and married him. During her presence in Souf, she made contact with the Qadiriya Order. The French authorities transferred her husband to Batna, but Isabelle stayed in Souf two months. Later, she joined her husband in Batna. In May 1901, the French ordered her to leave North Africa without explanation, so she returned to France and continued to write several projects including her novel "Trimardeur". In 1902, she returned to Algeria and increased her own efforts as a writer, and several of her short stories were printed in the local press. She wrote many books such as "Dans L'ombre Chaude de L'Islam", "Au Pays des Sables", "Pages d'Islam". (§ 2)

On October 20th 1904, Isabelle went with her husband Henny to Aïn Séfra and rented a mud house. The following day, a flash flood struck the area and Isabelle died on October 21st 1904. (§ 3)
